Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

http://www.wrh.noaa.gov/sto/brief/wwa_bc_cal.php

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

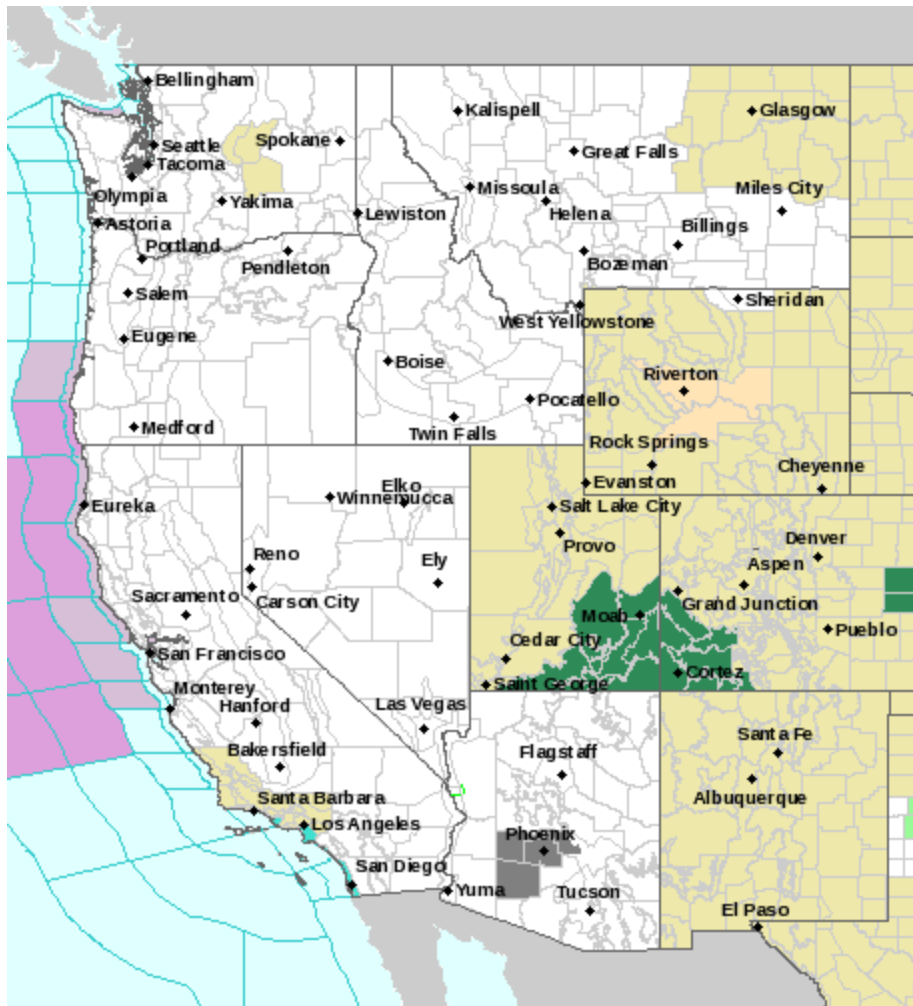

Slight Chance of Thunderstorms Eastern Areas Late Today and Saturday. A weak low pressure trough will be over the Northern California region through Independence Day. Thunderstorms are expected just to the east and southeast of the region late today and Saturday, and there is a slight chance that storms may form in or drift into our eastern areas from Lassen County southward. These storms would produce light rainfall, if they develop. The trough will also produce afternoon cumulus over the higher terrain throughout the region through July 4th, and isolated showers may develop. At this time thunderstorms are not expected elsewhere through July 4th. A gradual cooling trend will take place starting today. Afternoon inland temperatures will be around 10 degrees above normal today, and only 2-5 degrees above normal by the 4th. A deeper marine layer will keep coastal regions mild and stronger seas breeze winds will develop each afternoon. Diurnal, locally driven afternoon wind patterns will prevail in most areas, so seasonable wind speeds and directions are expected during the afternoon peak burning period each day. The trough will strengthen over the area beginning Tuesday and produce more cloudiness and S to W wind, especially east of the crest. Temperatures will also drop to normal or slightly below normal midweek. There is a chance of showers or thunderstorms on Wednesday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Scattered wet thunderstorms across the deserts today, mainly near the Nevada border and the Colorado River. Isolated storms today in the Sierras, Inyo N.F. and eastern San Bernardino and Cleveland N.F.'s. Breezy in the Antelope Valley and Banning Pass. Outflow from stationary thunderstorms over northern Arizona has pushed into portions of Southern California. This influx of moisture will allow for scattered thunderstorms to develop in the deserts throughout the day. Isolated storms will also be possible on desert adjacent areas of the Cleveland and San Bernardino National Forests. This afternoon, isolated showers and storms will develop further north in the Sierras and Inyo N.F. Most, if not all, storms should produce some rainfall. A developing trough is expected to deepen across the West Coast which will scoot most of the moisture east of the area Saturday and Sunday. Onshore flow will strengthen the next two days which will allow for west winds of 15-25 mph with gusts to 45 mph to develop each afternoon in the Antelope Valley and the Kern County Mountains. Minimum RH levels will approach 10% in and near the Antelope Valley during the afternoon hours. High temperatures will trend downward over the next few days and there will be an increase in marine layer coverage this weekend. Highs the next few days will be in the 70s along the coast, lower 90s in the valleys to 95-100 in the San Joaquin Valley. Minimum RH will be 15-20 percent from 2,000 to 4,000 feet above and inland from marine layer each afternoon. No thunderstorms are expected except in the eastern deserts after Saturday. Next week, models indicate a ridge may develop across the Southwest which would result in a warming trend. It will continue to be windy in and near the desert interface areas each afternoon through the middle of next week.
